Some Nuances

by Adrian Spratt, Class of 1979

Most of the students I know at Harvard Law School describe themselves as atypical, which must mean that a typical Harvard Law student is not. There is a stereotype of Harvard Law students, although one which is hard to specifically define. Most of us hope we differ from the stereotype in our personalities and sometimes in our political views. Yet the faults of the school do not originate with individuals. Instead, they stem from the evolution of Harvard Law into an abstraction which its population feels it cannot and often should not alter. The legal community has come to rely on this school for certain standards, and television borrows from it for a certain image. The abstraction is harmful, though, and perhaps my perspective as a blind student here will show some of the harm.

The dilemma in writing an article about my experiences as a blind student at the law school is that it implies my exceptionality, even though I hope to achieve a position of normality. I like to imagine I speak about the law school on the same footing as any other student, and that my experiences as a blind student merely provide my point of view with nuances.

Harvard Law has a long history of accepting blind applicants. Currently, there are five of us, and the names of previous graduates resurface constantly. I was aware I was by no means one of the first when I entered, so I was surprised to find myself respected for "doing as well as you do." Still, every Harvard Law student is susceptible to undue praise, and I suppose my case is just a variation on a theme.

Naturally, I share much of the ambivalence of students here towards our school. I, too, chose to come here partly because of the significance of the name, while at the same time I regret both that significance and my motive. I, too, have often regarded the second and third years as more or less an exercise in futility, although one or two courses and the trial advocacy program have helped me through my doubts.

Our first year section provided a companionship I hadn't expected; a study in personalities as well as in the law. Some students in class deserved one's concentration, and others were so deliberately outrageous they gave an excuse for the venting of a hiss. Also, it astonishes me even more now than then that first year professors should believe in the educational value of embarrassing their students, even though these students range from the early twenties to the early thirties. Members of that first year, now graduating, class include a former professor of psychology and a seasoned journalist, and none of us is as willingly molded as we once might have been. My way of handling such disrespectful treatment by those professors has been to resist their influence, and that presumably includes resisting their teaching. Other students simply find it traumatic. One perfectly well-intentioned first year professor said to me, "You're not afraid of me, are you?" — indicating that I had surmounted a major hurdle. It's an odd hurdle to want to place in someone's way.

I don't recognize Harvard Law in "Paper Chase" or from what little I know of One L. Perhaps because I anticipated three years among sixteen hundred ogres, I've been gratified to know several balanced and warm individuals here. One kind of event which isn't likely to make the movie about this place was our section's rendition on at least two occasions of "Happy Birthday"; these occasions were not just excuses to pass around cake under the professor's nose. So there are at least a few dozen human beings, perhaps even sixteen hundred of them, in this apparent display case of intellect.

While the admissions office promotes equality for minority groups, such as the handicapped, the school doesn't realize that its methods are themselves sometimes unnecessarily discriminatory. This discrimination does not occur across such simple lines as race or sex, but operates instead against idiosyncracies. A clear example is the utter dependency on exams, which ignores the strengths of reflective and careful-working students. At the same time, the demands made by exams, judging by my two summer jobs, don't resemble the requirements and stresses of daily legal occupations. For blind students, this emphasis on semester-end exams can be quite a burden, which is nevertheless hard to complain of without appearing to seek special allowances. Braille and tape don't permit inter-linear corrections, so it's hard to make satisfactory broad outlines; it's hard to direct readers to specific passages on open book exams when those passages can't be anticipated; and it's hard to keep in mind the many statutes and regulations in courses like tax and corporations. If the grading procedure were focused on less scattered objectives, it would be possible to maintain outlines and notes in manageable form. This list suggests the real problem with which we and any other injured group must contend: that the changes needed would require an overall reform of the law school to provide an education more sensibly related to the needs of our future legal jobs.

I am not suggesting standards should be revised downwards to compensate for a disadvantage. I only suggest that standards should be reconsidered if they seem to have little to do with the purposes they guide, and when they may do some harm. I'm sure the frustration for blind students is just a more tangible form of that endured by other students; one which is all the more insidious because less demonstrable.

Law firms have generally been less receptive to blind applicants than Harvard Law has, although it's hard to make definite claims of prejudice. A few firms have employed blind lawyers in the past and presumably some will in the future, but to put it most favorably, their standards appear much higher in our cases.

I decided to run the gamut of the private firms in the fall of my second year, despite my avowed interest in criminal law. I was soon admitted to that exclusive club whose members are greeted every morning by yet another rejection letter. Even so, one instance of confusion led to my failure to turn up for a particular interview. Assuming it would be silly to make excuses, I decided simply to forget the firm. But within a week the firm contacted me, praised the resume they had received through the Placement Office, and invited me down to visit. It is a big issue among the blind students whether to announce ahead of time the fact of blindness or else just to spring it on the interviewer at the first meeting. I opted for the second approach, believing it might help overcome preconceptions, and consequently that fact didn't appear on my resume. Naturally, I took up the firm's invitation. The letter had informed me I'd meet several of the firm's attorneys, but I met only one man during my visit. It was a short interview, and I never heard from them again, not even by way of rejection letter. Meanwhile, I was given an offer for a public sector position, and it led to a well-spent summer.

As I say, my interest is criminal law. However, several people have pointed out that criminal law is ideal for a handicapped person because my employer will probably be the state, rather than a private firm. If I weren't sure of my interest, this reasoning would turn me away from criminal law altogether. The implication is that governments are more able to take risks and to accept a reduced and perhaps inferior work product from their employees than is the private sector. In turn, that suggests private firms are more exacting and more professional. I believe the different approaches are explained by reasons less flattering to the private firms.

The major confessed reason for the reluctance on the part of private firms to hire blind people is the doubt whether they can be efficient enough. Even so, firms rarely take the minimal risk of engaging a blind law clerk for the summer to test their doubts. Law firms consider they need a greater degree of personal efficiency than almost any other kind of organization. Government work is accessible to the handicapped, as are schools and even private manufacturers. Law firms appear to feel immune from such distractions, perhaps because they perceive themselves essentially as servants. Yet the belief that one is serving some other belief of cause is a notorious shelter against one's other responsibilities. Serving clients seems to provide law firms with the ready excuse to give less consideration to blind applicants.

An unconfessed reason for this reluctance, I suspect, is the one other minorities have been given in the past: that the clients would prefer not to engage that minority. The error of that kind of prejudice is obvious enough, since sometimes, at least, morality should surmount a client's unreasonable preferences.

I'd be sorry if this limited space has made me leave the impression I have only criticism and little praise for Harvard Law. Though there are grounds for criticism, there are none for bitterness. I have met, among the students, faculty, administration, and staff, some of the most sensitive and entertaining people I know. The problem, as I see it, is the abstract status of Harvard Law, a status which is unavoidable, but which creates a pretext for essential non-reform. Perhaps if we could dissociate the law from social success and self-aggrandisement, we might conceive of a law school and a profession which conform more nearly to our private values.

FACULTY

DEREK CURTIS BOK

25th President of Harvard University

Mr. Bok, a labor lawyer and former Dean of the Law School for two and a half years, became the 25th President of Harvard University in 1971.

President Bok was born in Bryn Mawr, Pa., on March 22, 1930. His father, Curtis Bok, was a Philadelphia judge and novelist. After graduating from Stanford College, the president entered Harvard Law School in 1951. As a student, he served on the Board of Editors of the Law Review, receiving his LL.B. degree magna cum laude in 1954. He spent the following year in Paris as a Fulbright Scholar where he wrote The First Three Years of the Schuman Plan. While serving in the General Counsel's office of the Department of the Army, he studied at George Washington University and received an M.A. in Economics in 1958. He joined the Harvard faculty as an Assistant Professor of Law in 1958, becoming a full professor in 1961, and Dean in 1968.

Mr. Bok's primary interest has been labor and other fields of law involving interdisciplinary analysis. In addition to writing a number of articles on labor and antitrust law, he has been an arbitrator in labor disputes, acted as consultant to various government agencies, co-authored with the economist John Dunlop of Harvard, Labor and the American Community and co-authored Cases in Labor Law with Professor Archibald Cox.

As dean, Mr. Bok found an increasing demand for his opinions on the future of legal education in America, rapidly gaining a reputation as an expert. As university president, he is extending this expertise to higher education in general.

ALBERT M. SACKS

Dean and Dane Professor of Law

Dean Sacks was born in New York City in 1920. Following his graduation from high school, he entered City College of New York, where he majored in economics, receiving his B.B.A. in 1940. At the Law School, Dean Sacks served as President of the Law Review, and received his LL.B. from Harvard in 1948. He spent the next year clerking for Judge A.N. Hand, and the following year, 1949-50, clerking for Mr. Justice Frankfurter. He worked for two years in the offices of Covington & Burling before joining the Law School faculty as an assistant professor. Mr. Sacks became a full professor in 1955, was named Associate Dean in 1968, and Dane Professor of Law in 1969. When Mr. Bok, then the dean, was appointed president, Mr. Sacks took over administrative tasks as Acting Dean. Later that year, the appointment became permanent. In addition to leading the administration, Mr. Sacks teaches a course entitled The Legal Process, using a set of materials he co-edited with Henry M. Hart, Jr.

He received his B.A. from Harvard in 1971, a J.D. from the University of California at Berkeley in 1974, and an M.L.S. from the University of California at Berkeley also in 1974. Mr. Berring was admitted to the California Bar in 1974. In 1975-1976, he was an Assistant Professor and an Assistant Librarian for Reference and Acquisitions at the University of Illinois Law School. From 1976 to 1978, he was a Lecturer and Associate Librarian at the University of Texas Law School. Mr. Berring has co-authored Audio Research in the Law (1978) and Author's Guide to Journals in the Fields of Law, Criminal Law, and Criminology (1979).

Dedicated to the proposition that law students should not spend all their working hours studying, the Dormitory Council sponsors a variety of social and recreational activities, designed to provide students with an opportunity to relax and meet other law students on an informal basis. Regular Dorm Council diversions include weekly TGIF's and Saturday night movies, as well as dances, parties, and the annual Spring Barbecue. Sports Commissioners appointed by Dorm Council are responsible for intramural programs in football, volleyball, basketball, and softball. In addition, the Council manages the Gameroom, which caters to pool, ping pong enthusiasts, and the Law Book Thrift Shop. Composed of representatives elected from each floor or entryway of the dormitories, the Dorm Council also acts as a liaison between dorm residents and the Administration, and is instrumental in setting policies regarding the dormitories and the Harkness Commons.

HBLSA is a multi-faceted organization which performs a number of representative, educational, and activist roles in the Harvard community. The organization serves as a liaison between Black students at the Law School and the school administration; participates in the activities of the Combined Boston BALSAs and National BALSAs; runs orientation programs for first-year students, as well as interviewing workshops and other placement-oriented programs; sponsors a legislative research program which matches the skills of law students with the needs of local and national lawmakers; and sponsors an annual Ames Alternative moot court exercise.

The Harvard Legal Aid Bureau is composed of 56 second and third year students who provide legal services free of charge to low-income residents of Middlesex and Suffolk Counties. The Bureau both provides quality legal representation for people who otherwise could not afford it and trains its members in the skills of the legal profession. Practicing at the Bureau, as a consequence, goes far beyond learning how to file papers.

The Bureau handles cases covering the full range of poverty law. For example, Bureau members routinely deal with wrongful denials of welfare or Social Security benefits. These cases may begin with negotiations with individual case workers and may end in administrative hearings in the relevant department or in appeals to the Federal District Court. In the area of landlord-tenant law, the Bureau handles cases to enforce the minimum standards of fitness for human habitation set forth in the State Sanitary Code and other laws designed to protect tenants. Bureau members also appear in cases involving consumer protection, unemployment benefits, domestic relations and property tax abatements.

The addition to maintaining its commitment to individual client representation, the Bureau is continuing a program to broaden the impact of its services to its client community. The program also tries to increase cooperation between the Bureau and other legal services offices in the area. As part of this program, members drafted briefs and legislation, developed materials for community education, and served on committees of legal service workers in specific areas of poverty law.

The Harvard Women's Law Journal is a new publication devoted to the development of a feminist jurisprudence. The main purpose of the Journal is to provide an in-depth exploration of the impact of the law on women and the impact of women on the law. Political, economic, historical and sociological perspectives will be combined with legal ones, in order to present a more realistic picture of women's legal issues.

HLS Christian Fellowship

We at the HLS Christian Fellowship would like to take this opportunity to tell you about the fellowship. It is a non-demoninational group of Christians which is composed mostly of law students. We gather one evening each week to sing, pray, study the Bible, and otherwise share with one another. Our discussions focus upon what it means to be a Christian lawyer and a Christian at the law school.

In addition, we eat lunch together on a weekly basis, and some of our members participate in Bible studies in small groups. Our volleyball team, The Pilgrims, had a very enjoyable season and managed to win the B League Championship.

The East Wind is sweeping through the halls of the Harvard Law School! In response to the growing influence of and interest in Asia, Professor Jerome A. Cohen founded the Harvard East Asian Legal Studies (EALS) Program in 1964. Today EALS has expanded to become an established Law School program that provides leadership for the study of Asian law in the Western World. Roughly 100 students a year enroll in courses and seminars in Chinese and Japanese Law and advanced scholars from around the world gather here to conduct research into the legal systems of East and Southeast Asia.

Headquarters on the fourth floor of the Pound Building, the EALS research center is an attractive and congenial complex of offices, conference rooms and study space adorned with Asian art treasures. Students and scholars read or relax in the Asian periodical browsing room (over a cup of tea, of course) and make use of the small Asian legal library.

In addition to its formal course offerings, the Program hosts a lively luncheon speakers series — to which all students are invited — where lawyers, diplomats, businessmen and scholars of diverse nationalities and political persuasions informally discuss their experiences and perceptions of the Asian scene. EALS also sponsors Chinese and Japanese legal documents and language seminars, museum tours, basketball competitions, culinary sprees and other social gatherings.

To facilitate scholarly publication, in 1967, the School, in cooperation with Harvard's East Asian Research Center, the Harvard-Yenching Institute and scholars from other institutions, established "Harvard Studies in East Asian Law." To date ten books and more than forty articles dealing with the legal systems of China, Japan, Korea and Southeast Asia have been produced, and more are in preparation. HLS students in the Program have published several monographic studies.

Alumni of the program have put their skills and enthusiasm to work on behalf of law firms, businesses, the government, international organizations, and charitable foundations dealing with East Asia. Others have joined the faculties of law schools and university political science and history departments. Still others now practice law in Hong Kong, Singapore, Tokyo and other Asian capitals.

The Harvard Law School Forum is a non-profit, entirely student-run corporation. Since its charter in 1948, the Forum has brought noteworthy people from all fields of endeavor to the law school to engage in an enlightening and wide-ranging exchange of ideas.

Among the Forum speakers this year were Federal Appellate Judge A. Leon Higginbotham, Jr., television producer Norman Lear, author John Irving, television newscaster Barbara Walters, and Governor Michael Dukakis. In the Forum tradition, each speaker made opening remarks and then submitted to extensive questioning from the audience. The Forum is confident that it will continue to bring individuals of the highest caliber to the law school for speaking engagements.

Harvard Journal of Law and Public Policy

The Harvard Journal of Law and Public Policy published its first issue in the summer of 1978. It is incumbent upon those responsible for initiating a new publication to set forth the raison d'être of their enterprise. Especially is this so when the publication is founded at the Harvard Law School, which has produced three new journals in the last two years, bringing the total to seven.

Increasing specialization seems to be the moving force behind much of the proliferation of legal publications; thus, Harvard now has law reviews devoted to civil rights-civil liberties law, environmental law, international law, legislation, and women's law. The trend at other law schools is much the same, with each new publication carving out its niche in the realm of juristic analysis.

This proliferation of legal publications, however, has not contributed in any substantial way to a diversity of voices in the marketplace of legal ideas. Instead, virtually all of the new publications, like their older brethren, maintain a basically liberal editorial perspective.

The Harvard Journal of Law and Public Policy represents the efforts of a group of students willing to devote considerable time and energy to the development and advancement of alternative political and legal ideas. The Journal is not a specialized publication. Its subject matter encompasses a broad range of economic and political, as well as juristic, topics. Its distinguishing feature is that its editorial perspective is what may be generally characterized as conservative.

There is no litmus test for conservatism. Indeed, the membership of our organization includes a wide range of conservatives, libertarians, and members of both major political parties. General philosophical premises which are widely accepted within the organization, however, include judicial restraint, limited government, and the rule of law. The primary aim of the Journal, then, is to provide a forum for alternatives to the liberal establishment law review perspectives.

We do not anticipate any of our readers agreeing with all of our articles, or all of our readers agreeing with any particular article. That is not the purpose of an alternative publication. The value of the Journal lies in the presentation of novel, thoughtful, and thought-provoking articles, by jurists, academicians, politicians, and students, that will cause the reader to reexamine his assumptions about the appropriate directions for the development of law and public policy in our society, and perhaps seek new solutions to the problems confronting us as a nation. If we are in any way successful in accomplishing this goal, then our efforts in founding and publishing this Journal will be more than adequately rewarded.

Under the sponsorship of the Harvard Legislative Research Bureau, the Harvard Journal on Legislation entered its sixteenth year in 1978-79. Introduced in 1964 to publicize the Bureau's model legislation, the Journal has broadened its scope to include articles and student commentary on all aspects of legislation, public policy, and government structure. Unlike most law reviews, the Journal is not content with mere description; rather, it begins with the description and proceeds to consideration of proposals for legislative action and reform.

The year the Journal began publishing on a Winter, Spring and Summer basis. In addition to publishing articles of general interest to legislators, lawyers, and academicians, the Journal devoted one issue primarily to an analysis of the impact of legislative changes upon judicial processes. Another issue of the Journal evaluated major legislation facing the Ninety-sixth Congress.

For over twenty-five years, the Legislative Research Bureau has assisted federal, state, and local legislators in statutory drafting. Its model legislation has inspired state and local officials to experiment with new laws in meeting stubborn social and economic problems. This year the Bureau focused on projects requested by national and regional public interest groups. Frequently at the forefront of new legislation but often understaffed and underfunded, these organizations find the Bureau's research personnel and skills invaluable aides in their legislative efforts.

The Bureau and the Journal remain committed to easing the tension between the legislator's and the lawyer's conceptions of what American law is and should be. Both organizations seek to persuade Harvard students that their responsibility for making law will be no less important than their duty to interpret it.

Sparky might actually catch the pass; Ron appears to have thrown a spiral; Rod's not eating a Pop Tart; Marcia is not from Bolivia; Patty is not "horsing around"; Dan is awake before noon; Fran has not telephoned during the picture; These are not members of Jean's fraternity; Warren didn't hit a home run that day; Not all of Spooner's friends "went to Princeton"; Jim's pants don't have patches; Steve does not look organized; Ed does not have a bet on whether this picture will come out.

Rehnquist Club

The Rehnquist Club refused to die for yet another year, despite decency and autopsy requests by the newly-formed Journal of Vested Interest Law. The 38th Annual Charity Ball for Starving Multinational Corporations honored the latest Tax Lawyers Relief Bill, passed in 1978. The Annual Awards Banquet, which this year served KoolAid and The Best Darn Burger in the Whole Wide World, awarded the Nine-Lives-of-Morris-the-Cat Award to Richard M. Nixon, who as near as we can figure it has four more. The Award in Honor-of-the-Sixth-Article-of-the-Constitution-of-the-Soviet-Union ("However, all personal rights must yield to the interests of the State") went to Our Heroes, but the Award Committee was disappointed that this Article was not cited in any opinion, despite several excellent opportunities for doing so. The "We-Thought-Gen.-Patton-Had-the-Right-Idea Award" went to Sen. George McGovern for his courageous stand in favor of American intervention in Cambodia. Finally, the highlight of the evening was the "If-Only-Carswell-Had-Made-the-Court" Award which went to Powell, J., for his swing vote defection, approving Affirmative Action in the Bakke case. True conservatives can only dream of the decision that Harold Carswell would have written; now that would have been historic!

This year, the Harvard International Law Journal celebrated its twentieth year of publication. In these two decades, the Journal has come a long way from the occasional multilithed issues circulated by the Harvard International Law Club, to its present position: the Journal is the oldest and most prestigious student-written and student-edited international journal, and enjoys the largest circulation. As part of our anniversary festivities (which included the requisite banqueting and frolics), the Journal sponsored a seminar entitled, "United States Attitudes Towards Multinational Corporations." Papers were presented by prominent practitioners in international law, government officials, and distinguished members of the Harvard Law School faculty; they covered a wide range of topics from international tax to the enforcement of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act. These papers were subsequently published in the second issue of volume twenty.

The Journal is published three times a year and is devoted to issues of public and private international law, including international human rights, comparative law, and international business. Each issue features professionally written articles, student-written notes and comments, recent developments, and book reviews.

Amidst this year of celebration, we were sorry to say goodbye to our technical editor, Judith Bell; after three years of close collaboration and undying friendship, Judy has left us for the greener pastures of the Seattle fog.

Lincoln's Inn is the Law School's eating and social club. A BAR/BRI course

Finkelstein's Texas Bar Review

The Institute's reputation as the leading Texas Bar Review has been consistently maintained. The passing percentage has been unmatched by any other Bar Review.

We provide extensive and superior outline coverage of all the Bar Courses. Each student is furnished a complete set of comprehensive outlines for study. These outlines are especially written for the Institute by the various faculty members and without question represent the finest material of this sort available to the student. Additionally, we have a brand-new series of Mini-Outlines prepared by our faculty, for last minute review, each in the range of 12 to 15 pages in length. We also provide a series of supplements and handouts emphasizing important developments and areas, pointing out new and important cases, etc.

Classes are held in Austin, Houston, San Antonio, Waco, Dallas, and Lubbock. Individual cassette tape courses are available on arrangement for students who cannot attend classes.
